Battle lines harden over Trump impeachment trial witnesses

Dems claim new email evidence should be included.

The White House on Sunday signaled comfort with plans by Senate Republicans to avoid new witnesses in President Donald Trump's impeachment trial, while a top Democrat seized on a newly released email on the withholding of U.S. aid to Ukraine to press his case for testimony.

The Democratic-led House of Representatives approved two impeachment charges against Trump on Wednesday over his pressuring of Ukraine to investigate a political rival. There is little chance he will be convicted and removed from office through a trial in a Senate controlled by fellow Republicans.

Democrats are pushing to call top Trump aides to testify, but Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell wants the Senate to consider the case without hearing from new witnesses.

The Senate's top Democrat, Chuck Schumer, told reporters in New York that an email made public on Saturday about military assistance to Kiev underscored the need for witnesses.

The email, obtained by the Center for Public Integrity through a court order in a Freedom of Information Act case, showed senior White House budget official Michael Duffey directing the Pentagon to withhold the aid just 91 minutes after Trump concluded a July 25 phone call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky.

The aid and the call are at the heart of the impeachment case put together by Democrats, and Duffey is one of the four witnesses Schumer has proposed calling.

"If there was ever an argument that we need Mr. Duffey to come and testify, this is that information," Schumer said.

While Trump had indicated an interest in calling separate witnesses in his defense, he has also said he would go along with whatever decision McConnell and other Senate Republican leaders make.

In remarks on Sunday talk shows, Marc Short, chief of staff to Vice President Mike Pence, indicated the White House was on board with McConnell's goal of a speedy trial.

"The American people are tired of this sham," Short said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"To the extent that there's a prolonged trial, we're not anxious about that," he said. "Our administration is anxious to get back to working for the American people ... We've had a lot of witnesses already."

Lawmakers left Washington for a holiday break on Friday at loggerheads over how to proceed.

To ramp up pressure on McConnell to permit new testimony, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi - the top Democrat in Congress - has postponed sending the impeachment charges to the Senate.

Republicans have suggested Democrats want witnesses because the case they have assembled is so weak, while Democrats portray Republicans as scared about what new testimony might reveal.

"If her case is so air tight ... why does she need more witnesses?" Short said on "Fox News Sunday."

Trump is only the third U.S. president to be impeached. The others were Andrew Johnson in 1868 and Bill Clinton in 1998. Richard Nixon resigned in 1974 as he faced the threat of impeachment.

The House charged Trump with abusing his power by holding back $391 million in security aid to Ukraine in an effort to get Kiev to announce a corruption investigation of former Vice President Joe Biden, a leading candidate for the Democratic nomination to face Trump in the November 2020 election.

Trump was also charged with obstructing Congress by directing administration officials and agencies not to cooperate with the impeachment inquiry. He says he did nothing wrong and has dismissed his impeachment as a partisan bid to undo his 2016 election win.

"The American people and the United States Senate deserve to have a full, fair and complete trial and that means witnesses, it means documents," Democratic Senator Doug Jones told ABC's "This Week."

Republicans hold a 53-47 majority in the Senate, and Democrats are hoping a few moderate Republicans will support their bid for further testimony and force McConnell's hand.

"The leverage is our hope that four Republican senators will stand up ... and say this is much bigger than our current political squabbles," said Dick Durbin (D). REUTERS

2 'Skywalker' debut sales lowest of recent trilogy

"Star Wars" movie "The Rise of Skywalker" blasted into theaters with $374 million in global ticket sales over the weekend as fans rushed to see the final chapter in the long-running film saga, distributor Walt Disney Co said on Sunday. The massive ticket sales show "Star Wars" remains one of the premiere Hollywood franchises able to draw big crowds to theaters, but the results also fell short of the prior films in the current trilogy. The 2015 movie "The Force Awakens" opened with $517 million domestically and 2017's "The Last Jedi" had a $450 million global debut. Roughly $176 million of the total for "Rise of Skywalker" came from the United States and Canada, ranking as the 12th-biggest opening of all time, and the third biggest in December, in the world's largest film market. 3 'Bull's-eye' landing of Boeing's capsule test mission

Boeing Co's Starliner astronaut spacecraft made a "bull's-eye" landing in the New Mexico desert on Sunday, a successful ending to a crewless test mission that two days earlier failed to reach the orbit needed to dock with the International Space Station. The 7:58 a.m. ET landing at the White Sands desert capped a turbulent 48 hours for Boeing's botched milestone test of an astronaut capsule that is designed to help NASA regain its human spaceflight capabilities. "Today it couldn't really have gone any better," Boeing space chief executive Jim Chilton told reporters on Sunday, adding that experts would need weeks to analyze the data from this mission before determining if Boeing could move forward with its plan to send a crewed mission on the craft in 2020. 4 13 wounded at party for Chicago shooting victims

Thirteen people were wounded in a shooting at a party on Chicago's south side intended to honor the victim of an earlier shooting, police said, adding that they have taken into custody two people they consider of interest to the investigation. It was the latest in a string in violent crimes in Chicago, where the number of murders reported annually remains higher than the combined figure from New York and Los Angeles, two much larger cities.The victims ranged in age from 16 to 48, and 12 were in local hospitals on Sunday, hours after police responded at the scene at around 12:30 a.m. CT, according to a police statement. Four of the victims, including a 16-year-old male, were critically wounded on Sunday afternoon after suffering gunshot wounds to the chest or lower back. REUTERS

MTA announces 20 subway stations will receive accessibility improvement

These 20 stations add to the 48 previously announced.

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

As part of the proposed $51.5 billion 2020-2024 Capital Plan, an additional 20 subway stations will be made fully ADA accessible.

The MTA said in a press release the new stations will build on the 48 accessible stations previously announced and are part of a total of 70 subway stations that will receive an unprecedented $5.2 billion investment.

"New Yorkers deserve a subway system that works for everyone. This historic investment of $5.2 billion for accessibility in the next Capital Program will be life-changing for our customers," MTA Chairman and CEO Patrick J. Foye said in a press release.

The original 48 stations chosen in September met their "two-station away" coverage goal — meaning that passengers would not have to travel farther than two stops to reach an accessible station — and included transfer points and complexes as well.

The 20 new stations will serve a variety of subway lines and help increase citywide geographic coverage. They were chosen based on transfers, demographics, connections, ridership, constructability and synergy with other MTA projects. The locations were also chosen based on community input.

"All New Yorkers deserve equal access to their city and we must do everything in our power to accelerate the implementation of ADA accessibility in the transit system," said New York City Council Speaker Corey Johnson in a press release.

Johnson added, "I want to thank the MTA for taking another important step in that direction and the Council looks forward to continuing to work with the MTA and the Department of City Planning to ensure that we develop new policy strategies to help deliver the ADA station improvements like elevators that we so desperately need."

The MTA tweeted about the improvements, including a list of the locations, saying, "The Bronx! Brooklyn! Queens! Staten Island! Manhattan! Elevators are coming. See the full list of stations that we plan to make accessible during the next five years."

Chris Cooper on his 'nice little role' in 'Little Women'

MATT JUUL
letters@metro.us

As lightsaber battles and CGI cats dominate the big screen this holiday season, "Little Women" arrives just in time to save audiences who may be fatigued by Hollywood spectacles.

Director and screenwriter Greta Gerwig has masterfully adapted the classic Louisa May Alcott novel, with her latest film already a darling among critics ahead of its Christmas Day release. Actor Chris Cooper, who plays the altruistic Mr. Laurence, believes films like "Little Women" are "extremely important" in today's cinema landscape, as these touching tales of family relationships offer insight on the human condition, something that is often missing from action-filled blockbusters.

"When I was growing up watching films, we didn't have a lot of blue screen, green screen and intentional blow 'em, chase movies," Cooper tells Metro. "I dare say within a little while, I don't know when that will be, but I think a portion of us may as well had enough of the superhero films and would like to see more humanity."

While "Little Women" does feature an "Avengers"-like team-up of A-list stars - the cast includes Saoirse Ronan, Emma Watson, Florence Pugh, Timothée Chalamet, Laura Dern, Bob Odenkirk and Meryl Streep - humanity is clearly at the heart of this coming-of-age drama. For those who haven't read Alcott's work or seen previous adaptations, "Little Women" revolves around the March sisters as they deal with love, life and family while growing up in 1860s New England, amidst the horror of the American Civil War.

Cooper praises Gerwig for her command of the set and story, as well as all the hard work that his younger cast members brought to the table each and every day during filming. The veteran actor called the production a "pure delight" to be a part of, and was blown away by the work produced by his co-stars and crew.

"I had a lot of time where I was observing these younger actors and watching Greta work with them," says Cooper. "I can't emphasize [enough], I was really impressed."

"These people came really prepared as actors and knew what they wanted, came with great ideas," he adds. "I wish I had that much self-assurance."

In preparation for his "nice little role" as Mr. Laurence, the benevolent benefactor to the March family, Cooper had to take part in a few firsts, one of which was reading "Little Women" for the first time in his life, something that his wife ribbed him thoroughly about.

"'Little Women,' as a little girl, she read it and all her friends read it, but she also read 'Tom Sawyer,'" says Cooper. "The guys can step up and take a look at this book because it's still very informative of that period."

Despite being a resident of Massachusetts, Cooper admits he's also been a "very bad Bostonian" in that he never explored Louisa May Alcott's Orchard House and various other historical sites in Concord, where much of the project was filmed. Luckily, he and Odenkirk were treated to a special tour through history by one of Doris Kearns Goodwin's sons.

"He took us on a two-hour walking tour up to the cemetery and over to where some Revolutionary War fighting happened," says Cooper. "That's what it took to get me over here."

For Cooper, "Little Women" marks his second role in 2019 where he's put in the position of a father figure, having previously played Jerry Vogel, the dad of Matthew Rhys' Lloyd Vogel, in the Mr. Rogers biopic "A Beautiful Day in the Neighborhood." Although Jerry and Mr. Laurence are radically different characters, with the former having abandoned his family while the latter fully embraced his, both stories offer poignant portrayals of the relationship between fathers and their children. Cooper believes that tales about families and the human condition are what will truly stand the test of time.

"It's an age-old storyline," says Cooper. "Some folks might call it clichéd, but we got succeeding generations of people and we have film and that story should never, can never, get old or clichéd. It's pretty vital."

EVERYTHING YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT MOSCOW MULES

The Holiday Mule by Grey Goose. GREY GOOSE

Winter is here, and so is Moscow Mule season.

The famous vodka and ginger drink is expected to be on the rise this winter, so I spoke with Douglas Graham-Leigh, a Grey Goose New York brand ambassador about all things Moscow Mule. From the type of mug to the perfect ingredients, here's everything you need to know about the much-loved drink.

When you think Moscow Mules, one of the first things that probably come to mind is the iconic copper mugs, but do the mugs actually help the flavor of the drink? Graham-Leigh explained the mug is a tradition and looks good but doesn't do anything for the drink. He also noted, "It doesn't typically affect the flavor, but any metal seeping into the drink is never ideal!"

Graham-Leigh also explained to me that there is a reason why the mug came to be. He said, "The Moscow Mule was created by an English ex-pat named Jack Morgan, who owned a bar in LA called The Cock 'n' Bull Tavern. His girlfriend at the time, Ozaline Schmidt, had recently inherited a copper factory and had a surplus of mugs, so to help the drink stand out, they used these for the drink."

Now that you know about the mug how about trying to master the perfect Moscow Mule? When it comes to making the perfect Moscow Mule, it should come to no surprise that Graham-Leigh mentioned balance as a key factor. He told me, "The ideal Mule is a balance between the fiery nature of ginger, with a hint of sharp from lime juice, balanced out with a great vodka. Be sure to use a vodka that's rich and full-bodied — like Grey Goose — showing itself up against the boldness of the other ingredients and helping elevate those other flavors."

When it comes to putting together the cocktail, Graham-Leigh recommends using a ginger beer, not a ginger ale. For some cool ginger beers, he suggests looking into Fever-Tree and Bundaberg, the latter an Australian brand. If you're already familiar with the drink, he suggests experimenting with different flavored ginger beer and different garnishes. Graham-Leigh mentioned, "It's a very versatile cocktail that you can play around with — the opportunities for adapting it to your own tastes are endless!"

If you're already planning on making a Moscow Mule for your next dinner party or holiday party, Graham-Leigh has a few pairing suggestions for you. When it comes to pairing the drink with food, he suggests poultry dishes, lighter bites, Thai food and a variety of curries will make the flavors really stand out. It pairs well with food that showcases lime or ginger flavors. If you're making a ginger-themed dessert, it could pair nicely as well.

Graham-Leigh's go-to classic Moscow Mule recipe:
-1.5oz Grey Goose
-0.25 oz of fresh lime juice
-Top with a tasty ginger beer
-Serve with plenty of ice and a lime wheel garnish

Graham-Leigh suggests using candied ginger as a garnish, or if you want to do a holiday twist on the classic cocktail, he suggests following the above recipe and garnishing with nutmeg and a sprig of fresh rosemary.

Getting to know Julia Fox, the breakout star of 'Uncut Gems'

You'll be seeing a lot of her in the future.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

JULIETA CERVANTES

The lion's share of the buzz surrounding the newest Safdie Brothers film "Uncut Gems" is the undeniable lead performance by Adam Sandler as Howard "Howie" Ratner, a shady New York City jeweler who can't seem to get out of money trouble. But another standout performance in the film comes from co-star Julia Fox, who plays Julia, the employee at his Midtown jewelry shop that he leaves his family for. The film is Fox's first major acting role and one gaining high critical praise, making her one of the most talked-about new actresses to come along in some time. I caught up with Fox to talk about taking the spotlight and what the future will bring.

"Uncut Gems" is your first major acting role. How did you first get involved with the Safdie Brothers?
I have kind of known them forever. They had already written a version of the script when they met me. I think that when Josh [Safdie] had met me it just clicked in his mind [that I would play] Sadie, that was the character's original name. Because Adam's daughter's name is Sadie, they had to change it because he was uncomfortable, and they couldn't think of any other name besides 'Julia.' But, I still wasn't locked in for the role. So I was like, 'Oh my gosh if someone else plays this role that was meant for me and now has my name, I am going to be so upset.' It would be so embarrassing. Josh has always called me his star and he wanted to be the one to discover me. I've always felt his support from afar. I've always felt that he was always rooting for me and cheering me on in whatever I did. I love Josh.

Was acting ever something you saw yourself pursuing early in your career?
No, not really, I've always been an artist and a creative and I have never limited myself to one medium. Whether it was fashion or photography or painting or writing. So this was just another way to express that. I had experience in film because I shot and directed a short film right before I was approved for the role. So, I was already heading in that direction. I wanted the short film to be a foot in the door and then I feel like it swung open for me.

Is helming your own feature-length films the next step in your career?
I think that's definitely my bigger picture. That's what I'd like to do in my long term. I think right now, acting is on my forefront. I would definitely like to act more and learn more techniques and knowledge about the industry. Since I didn't go to school for this, I didn't study this, I can only learn by doing it and being in this environment around these people. I would like to do that but my bigger picture is definitely writing, directing and producing. I don't want to jump the gun. I think it's a little ambitious for me to say, 'Okay, I'm ready to direct my first feature' but I definitely want to put that in motion by talking about it and putting out into the universe.

The Safdie Brothers have such a knack for creating characters you root for even though they are horrible people. Your character, Julia, even though you start out having mixed feelings about her, really actually does love Adam Sandler's character Howie in a profound way.
I loved how they showed their relationship flourish and blossom. I loved how they didn't show her, the 'side chick' is always portrayed in a negative light and I feel like they made her the hero in the long run … that's what I really loved. They made her this really dignified strong and powerful woman ... she always remained in control and always knew what she was doing, dominated every scene and every man. I think she's a feminist! She kind of lets these men think they're running the show, but she's running the show. I love this character and I could relate to her on so many levels.

Jones, Barkley go off in Giants OT win

While the Giants are playing for peanuts, they can at least take solace in knowing that their star running back has returned to his dominant form.

After posting 112 yards and two touchdowns last week against the Miami Dolphins, the second-year rusher carved open the Washington Redskins for 279 total yards (189 rushing, 90 receiving) in a 41-35 overtime victory.

Sunday's victory also featured the return of rookie quarterback Daniel Jones, who went off for 352 yards passing and five touchdowns — including the game-winner to Kaden Smith from three yards out.

While Jones' day was stupendous, it was a reassuring return to form for Barkley, who had struggled mightily since coming back from a high ankle sprain that held him out for three games from Weeks 3-6.

It took Barkley just one half and nine carries to eclipse the 100-rushing-yard mark for the second straight game.

Saquon Barkley posted 279 total yards on Sunday. GETTY IMAGES

A 67-yard touchdown rush with 6:46 left in the first quarter highlighted a blistering start from both sides, which featured touchdowns on the first five possessions of the game.

The Giants emerged from that five-possession track meet on top 21-14 when Jones hit Barkley for a 33-yard touchdown pass with nine minutes to go in the second.

New York would nab another touchdown, a 10-yard connection from Jones to Cody Latimer with 38 seconds to go in the half to take a two-touchdown lead into the break.

The third quarter would see Redskins quarterback Dwayne Haskins go down with an ankle injury that forced him out of the game. In stepped Case Keenum, who cut the Giants lead to seven with 6:38 in the third quarter after a seven-yard pass to Steven Sims.

Barkley would help the Giants answer right back three minutes later when he broke open a screen pass for 51 yards to set up Kaden Smith's nine-yard touchdown.

The 14-point lead was an invitation for head coach Pat Shurmur and defensive coordinator James Bettcher to take their foot off the proverbial gas pedal.

A blocked punt and pass interference on the Giants gave the Redskins the ball on the Giants' 1-yard line, which led to an Adrian Peterson touchdown to cut the lead back to seven.

The Giants remained passive, leading to the Redskins' tying score in the final minute as Keenum's one-yard rush with 29 seconds left capped off a 99-yard drive and sent things to overtime.

Jets stun playoff-hopeful Pittsburgh

The Jets won't be playing past December, but they delivered a blow for a January hopeful on Sunday afternoon.

New York stifled the playoff-hopeful Pittsburgh Steelers, 16-10, as the visitors were forced to make a pair of quarterback changes — with little effectiveness.

Delvin Hodges was benched for Mason Rudolph after a difficult start, only for the initial starter to return following an injury to Pittsburgh's backup.

The Steelers could only muster 260 total yards on the afternoon as the Jets defense covered for an offense that couldn't do much, either.

In fact, they had an identical 260 yards of total offense before their victory formation in the final seconds of the game. Darnold completed 16-of-26 passes for 183 yards and a touchdown while Le'Veon Bell mustered 72 yards on 25 carries.

Darnold's lone touchdown of the game came on the Jets' opening drive — a common theme this season — when he hit Robby Anderson for a 23-yard score.

It was a comfortable early cushion as the Jets defense took full advantage of facing Hodges.

While the rookie passer completed 7-of-9 passes during the first 20:40 of play on Sunday, his two incompletions were interceptions. It was his fifth and sixth turnovers in his last six quarters of play.

GETTY IMAGES

With the Steelers' offense going nowhere, head coach Mike Tomlin was forced to turn back to Mason Rudolph with 9:20 left in the first half, who was benched for Hodges in Week 12.

It was a 10-0 game by the time of the move as Sam Ficken hit a field goal 45 seconds into the second.

Rudolph's return sparked the Steelers' comeback as they poached 10 points in the final 1:18 of the half.

After Chris Boswell's 49-yard field goal, a Darnold fumble gave Pittsburgh possession in Jets territory. In three plays, the Steelers were in the end zone as Rudolph hit Diontae Johnson for a 29-yard score.

Both offenses would dry up yet again with Ficken's second field goal of the day proving to be the only points put up in the third quarter.

The fourth quarter would see the Steelers go back to Hodges under center after Rudolph suffered a shoulder injury. A third Ficken field goal would put the Jets up six with 3:11 in the fourth, which was more than enough as the Steelers came up empty on their final two drives of the afternoon.
